Aengus was a Celtic boy who was just like any other boy. However, he had a problem. His mother and father had discouraged him from voicing his concerns. He feared that it would cause the spirits to act against their family. He feared that his friends would laugh at him. He knew what was coming, and he was not the least bit happy about it.

Aengus had seen his mother carefully preparing food. She placed two additional settings at their kitchen table. He had seen his father chopping and stacking wood in anticipation of the bonfire. He had his extra bed sheet sitting on his bed, ready to place over his head as soon as night fell. There was no better disguise than to be a ghost among the spirits. Although he had survived eight Samhains and nothing disastrous had fallen on his family, Aengus was still petrified, or stunned with fear, about the coming evening. Have the Druid priests prayed enough? Have we gathered enough crops to sacrifice to the spirits? he thought.

This was a favorite holiday among the Catholics and was held on November 1. It was a day of joyful celebration to remember the good people who had passed away during the year. The night before the celebration was called Hallows Eve. Eventually, this was shortened to Halloween. This was a day where the lines between life and death were blurred. Evil spirits came to walk the earth. Traditions from the Celtic celebration of Samhain were common to find on Halloween.

The Europeans immigrated to North America in the 1700s. They brought Halloween and other celebrations with them. Over the years, many of the traditions have changed. Today, a once terrifying day is celebrated by exchanging candy, carving pumpkins, bobbing for apples, dressing up, and having fun with friends. A celebration that once focused on evil spirits is now celebrated by young and old alike.

Halloween Around the World

Name: _____ Date: _____

Halloween started among the Celts over 2,000 years ago. Today it is one of the most popular celebrations of the year. In North America, we celebrate by exchanging candy, decorating our homes, dressing up, and carving pumpkins. However, other countries differ in the ways they celebrate the holiday.

In Belgium, it is traditional for people to light candles in memory of dead relatives on October 31. In the Czech Republic, chairs are arranged in front of each family's fireplace. There's one chair for each living relative and one chair for each deceased relative that is no longer with them. In Austria, people might leave out bread, water, and lit lamps before going to bed. This is their way of welcoming the previous owners' spirits back into the homes.

In China, the celebration is known as Teng Chieh. Similar to the Austrians, the Chinese place food and water in front of photographs of deceased family members. They then light bonfires and lanterns to direct and guide the spirits as they travel to earth on Halloween. A popular practice among the Chinese Buddhists is to make paper boats that are then placed in the water and burned. This is done as a remembrance, or tribute, to honor those who have passed.

While Japan does not celebrate Halloween, they have a similar festival called Obon Festival. It is held in July or August. The Obon Festival is for honoring memories of Japanese ancestors. Special foods are prepared, candles are lit, and lanterns are believed to carry the spirits back to their families for the evening.
